Dad, Franklin writes to his sister II Jan 3 1839

My dear Mary calamity yet I hope will be averted - though if otherwise, I have not the slightest doubt of Government being obliged in a very short time to return to it. There is much to be said against the Assignment system, and much in its favor - but this is a subdivision of the great subject whether Transportation shall be continued or abolished.

Amongst the newspapers sent you will find in the Hobart ^{on} Town Courier a copy of the Despatch of Sir John above alluded to, and in another an account of our late brilliant Regatta, which is to be an annual one and of which Sir John may be considered as the founder. Its objects were this year confined to rowing and sailing boats, the former in particular being an object of great colonial importance. It is our intention to embrace a great number of additional ones in the festival of next year.

I have taken up my pen again on my return to Hobarton and am now writing on the 3rd of January, in the new year, being just upon the point of entering upon the 3rd of Sir John's administration of the affairs of this colony.

Amongst the minor changes, Mr.
Price (Mary Franklin's husband) becomes 2^d Police magistrate at Hobarton, a place for which he is said to be extremely well fitted.
Mr Montagu will go home in the Dewey at the latter end of Feb^r.

I have begged him to call in Bedford Place, he is a very gentlemanly and extremely clever man, of good connections and good fortune - he well, I think have much influence at the Colonial Office and may be able to do much good to this colony by his representations - He and Mr Foster married two nieces of Colonel Arthur and they and their particular admirers generally go by the name of the "Arthur faction" at least it is the name given them by the Opposition papers.

They are certainly deeply attached to Sir George Arthur-----

The town is at present afflicted with an epidemic catarrh, supposed to arise from the unseasonable weather or at any rate from some peculiar state of the atmosphere.
It is much more virulent at Sydney.
There is scarcely a house which has not been affected by it: and some few deaths have occurred (chiefly amongst young children) and amongst these we have to deplore that of the Surveyor General, Mr George Frankland, a man of the most varied accomplishments of mind, of the most gentlemanly feelings and manners, of singular wit and humour and of the most amiable private character. From the nature of his public office, he considered himself a privileged companion of ours in all exploring excursions and journeys, but what most brought us, or at least him and me together was the late Regatta, of which he was one of the most active managers, and into which he threw all the imagination and ardour of his mind and character - I was in constant correspondence with him on this, at the time all-engrossing subject
