Sibling Rivalry: the India-Australia Relationship, 1858-1901

By Alexander E. Davis (BA Hons)

A thesis submitted in fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Arts
School of History and Classics
University of Tasmania
May 2011
Declaration of Originality

This thesis contains no material which has been accepted for a degree or diploma by any institution. To the best of my knowledge the thesis does not contain any material written or published by another person, except where due reference is made.

Signed_______________________                Date ________________
Declaration of Authority to Access

This thesis is not to be made available for loan or copying for two years following the date this statement was signed. Following that time, the thesis may be made available for loan and limited copying in accordance with the Copyright Act 1986.

Signed_________________________          Date ___________________
Abstract

This thesis examines the relationship between India and Australia between 1858 and 1901. It draws upon a recent reinterpretation of India’s role in the British empire that views it as a power centre. This approach is applied to an examination of the India-Australia relationship to consider how the Indian government and the Australian colonial governments communicated with and acted towards one another. This adds to our understanding of the workings of the British empire, India’s role within it and shows Australia’s imperial connections to be more complicated than a simple connection with London. Starting with the Indian Rebellion and the transfer of power from the East India Company to the Crown and ending with Australia’s partial break with empire, Federation in 1901, this study will discuss a period in which the relationship has received only very limited attention. India’s role in the empire was expanding and the administration in both colonies was stable. Material from around Australia is used, including parliamentary papers from New South Wales, Queensland, Tasmania, South Australia and Victoria, and archival material from South Australia and Tasmania.

Four chapters focus on separate thematic issues that defined the India-Australia relationship: administrative cooperation, trade, military issues and Indian indentured labour. Previously unknown and unexamined ways in which India and Australia cooperated will be examined. We can conclude from the discussion of administrative cooperation that the relationship between India and Australia was deeper than has previously been acknowledged. The following three chapters continue with this argument, and reveal more details and nuances in the nature of the relationship. The manner of the relationship was extremely friendly – with symbolic gestures on both sides and extremely respectful dialogue. However, it also shows the relationship, as is implied by the conception of India as a major power centre, to be asymmetrical. When it was in her own best interests, India was willing and able to exert its will over Australia. The responses of the Australian colonies to India’s ascendancy varied over time and between colonies.
Acknowledgments

I would like to thank the School of History and Classics for their help in preparing this thesis. In particular, I wish to thank my supervisors Kate Brittlebank and Stefan Petrow for their help with planning and conception of this thesis. Thanks also to Pamela Allen of the School of Asian Languages and Studies at the University of Tasmania for replacing Kate Brittlebank as supervisor in the final stages of this thesis. Thanks also to Gavin Daly, Elizabeth Freeman and Hamish Maxwell-Stewart. Thanks to my fellow postgraduates for their support over my candidature, particularly Eleanor Cave, Chris Leppard, Allan Brooks, Bronwyn Meikel, Jennifer Penshow, Nick Brodie, Anthony Ray, Phillip Caudrey, Jacqueline Gratton, Patrick Ball, Paul Jarvis and Michael Berry.

I owe great thanks to all my proofreaders, who helped in the final preparation of my work. This includes my supervisors, Kate, Stefan and Pam and my parents Julia and Peter Davis. Thanks to Lance Brennan for his advice on this subject and his help with research at Flinders University. Thanks to Paul Burton and Jessica Dietrich for having me to stay with them in Canberra.

Thanks to the staff at the following institutions for their help locating information:
Tasmanian Archives and Heritage Office
The University of Tasmania Library (particularly the Document Delivery and the Special and Rare Collections departments)
The Flinders University Library
The Tasmanian Parliamentary Library
The National Library of Australia, Canberra
The National Archives of Australia, Canberra
The State Archives of South Australia
The State Library of South Australia
The British Library (particularly the India Office Records)

Thanks to my parents Peter and Julia Davis for their help with this work. Thanks also to my brother Simon Davis and his partner Alanna Dale.

Thanks to Rachel Barwick for sharing my life for much of this project.

Thanks to my friends Jessica Brown, Astrid Goss, Daniel Reid, Alison Rose and Corin Sprod.

Thanks to Melinda Standish and Holly Greaves.

Preparing a dissertation is ultimately a slow and solitary endeavour. However, during a difficult second year I frequently felt I may have lost the ability to write and focus. Three people were particularly important in helping me through this. These were Marina Ladaniwskyj, a very close friend who understands the process, Carolina Burgess-Lowe, whose understanding and empathy were/are invaluable, and Madeleine Swann, who studied with me (though she slept a little more than one would expect) and supported me constantly. Thank you.
Contents:

Introduction – India, Australia and Empire ........................................ 1

Chapter One – Communication and Cooperation ......................... 17

Chapter Two – The Economic Relationship ................................. 45

Chapter Three – Military Connections ....................................... 72

Chapter Four – Australian Attempts to Recruit Indian ‘Coolies’ ........ 100

Conclusion – A Misunderstood Relationship .............................. 134

Bibliography ............................................................................. 141

List of Tables:

Goods Shipped to Australia from India, 1883 ................................ 48

Horses Shipped to India from Victoria, 1879-1883 .................... 56

Horses Shipped to India from the Australian Colonies, 1860-1900 56

Illustration:

The Indian Contingent at the Federation Parade ...................... 97
List of Abbreviations:

CSO: Colonial / Chief Secretary’s Office
ICS: Indian Civil Service
IOR: India Office Records
MIL: Military Department of the Government of India (footnotes only)
NAI: National Archives of India
NLA: National Library of Australia
PD: Premier’s Department
PJ: Public and Judicial Department of the Government of India (footnotes only)
SRSA: State Records of South Australia
TAHO: Tasmanian Archives and Heritage Office