

KATHRYN PAUL

b. 1948, U.S.A.

Working on printmaking and watercolour papers enables me to draw and paint into the photographic image but the meaning of the pictures is still about the photographic context and the colour is applied to clarify rather than abstract or obscure the subject. What I respect the most about photography is that it is still very much a communicative art able to deal unapologetically with beauty and content.

Lately I find myself uninterested in a personal or autobiographical image, therefore I am moving away from the interiors with their unavoidable psychological overtones, to nature with its more universally symbolic space.
