Little Terrors:
The Child Antagonist in the Horror Film

by

Dominic Lennard, B.A. (Hons)

Submitted in fulfilment of the requirements for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (PhD)

School of English, Journalism and European Languages
University of Tasmania
Declaration of Originality

I declare that this thesis contains no material which has been accepted for a degree or diploma by the University or any other institution, except by way of background information and duly acknowledged in the thesis. I also declare that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, it contains no material previously published or written by another person except where due acknowledgement is made in the text of the thesis. Nor does the thesis contain any material that infringes copyright.

28 July, 2009

Statement of Authority of Access

This thesis may be made available for loan and limited copying in accordance with the Copyright Act 1968.

28 July, 2009
Since the 1950s children have proven to be among the most effective and enduring antagonists in the popular horror film, beginning with Rhoda Penmark (Patty McCormack) of The Bad Seed (1956) and the space-invader infants of Village of the Damned (1960), and progressing to the possessed child (Linda Blair) of The Exorcist (1973) and, more recently, the psychic ghost-girl Samara (Daveigh Chase) of The Ring (2002). Using theoretical approaches adopted from Marxism, feminism, film theory and cultural studies, this thesis analyses representations of the “child antagonist” in the horror film across the late twentieth and early twenty-first centuries.

In contrast with the traditionally innocent characterisations of the child in Western film and literature, the child antagonist brings to the surface the complexities and contradictions underlying the apparently harmless meanings readily attributed to the child. This thesis identifies the social and cinematic discourses in which the horror film situates children. In particular, it demonstrates that the portrayal and behaviour of child antagonists enables theorisation of the key discourses that construct popular understandings of childhood, including innocence, class, gender, sexuality, consumer culture, and parenting. Readings of The Bad Seed and Village of the Damned discuss the use of child antagonists as representatives of class conflict; an examination of It's Alive (1974) considers monstrous offspring as reflections of paternal masculinity; discussions of The Brood (1979) and The Ring demonstrate the child antagonist’s grounding in ideas of motherhood; an analysis of Alien (1979) considers the film’s creature as a manifestation of anxieties about reproductive technologies; and a chapter on Hard Candy (2005) addresses the evolution of the child antagonist in light of contemporary panic over paedophilia. These analyses emphasise the unconscious symbolic value of the figure of the child, and the crises provoked when that symbolism is subverted.

Representations of children in popular film are of great cultural and political significance because of their capacity to reflect and influence public perceptions. The unique prevalence of the child antagonist in the horror film, along with the exclusion of children as viewers, renders the genre perhaps the primary domain for the examination of those representations. Through investigation of the child antagonist in horror, this thesis seeks to construct a clearer view of the cultural conceptualisation of "childhood," and the role of horror in charting the relationship between children and adults.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I wish to thank my supervisor, Dr. Lisa Fletcher, for her guidance, enthusiasm and advice, her confidence in the project, and the long hours she devoted to reading drafts and offering constructive and well-reasoned criticism. I would also like to acknowledge and thank my co-supervisor, Dr. Elle Leane, for her encouragement and valuable advice on the thesis at various stages, and my past supervisor, Dr. Jenna Mead, for her watchful supervision during the project's infancy.

For their generous support and collegiality, I would like to extend these thanks to the staff and postgraduate community of the School of English, Journalism and European Languages at the University of Tasmania. Additionally, I would like to acknowledge that this thesis was written with the support of an Australian Postgraduate Award.

I am also thankful for the support of my parents, Lee-Anne and Tony, my office-mate Eleni, and my partner Samara.
CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION: MAPPING THE CHILD ANTAGONIST 3

ADULTS ONLY: THE HORROR FILM AS CONFESSIONAL 14

TO CATCH THEM UNAWARES: POPULAR FILM, ADULT EXPECTATION AND THE CHILD ANTAGONIST AS "EVIL-INNOCENT" 20

PLAYING HIDE AND GO SEEK: RECOGNISING THE CHILD ANTAGONIST 29

1. SPOILED ROTTEN: CLASS AND THE CHILD ANTAGONIST 36

KILLING WITH CLASS: THE BAD SEED (1956) 38

HEIRS ABERRANT: CULTURAL DOMINANCE AND VILLAGE OF THE DAMNED (1960) 49

CONCLUSION 54

2. BEWARE THE STARE: THE GAZE AND THE CHILD ANTAGONIST 59

THE GAZE AND THE TO-BE-LOOKED-AT CHILD 61

POWER AND PERSPECTIVE IN JOHN CARPENTER'S HALLOWEEN (1968) 64

EYES THAT PARALYSE: VILLAGE OF THE DAMNED (1960) 70

CONCLUSION 78

3. ALL FUN AND GAMES: CHILDREN'S CULTURE IN THE HORROR FILM 83

NO PLACE LIKE HOME: DEEP RED (1975) AND THE ICONOGRAPHY OF CHILDHOOD 86

CONCLUSION 102

THE HARDER THEY FALL: PATRIARCHAL POWER AND THE OMEN'S "ARMAGEDDON" 110

PAST INCARNATIONS: THE EXORCIST AND THE TYRANNY OF CHILDHOOD 126

CONCLUSION 139
5. "THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE": THE CHILD ANTAGONIST'S MALIGN MOTHER
   Treachery on the Home Front: Motherhood, Wartime Anxiety and The Bad Seed
   Sons of bitches: Maternal Control and The Brood (1979)
   Vicious Videos and Absent Mothers: The Ring (2002)
   "ALL OF THEM WITCHES": Social Alienation and Rosemary's Baby (1968)
   Conclusion

   141

   145

   151

   160

   174

   178

6. Techno-Tots and Babes from Beyond:
   Industrial Infancies and Paternal Anxiety
   Techno-Dads and "Alien" Offspring: Imaging, Reproductive Inscription and Alien (1979)
   "Somehow the Identities Get All Mixed Up": Paternity and Technology in It's Alive (1974)
   Conclusion

   180

   182

   191

   199

   Too Close For Comfort: the Viewer and the Paedophile
   The Surgery
   Adult Irresponsibility, or the Child with No Name
   Conclusion

   201

   204

   210

   213

   216

Conclusion

   219

Works Cited

   Films

   226

   Secondary Sources

   235