Return to Mr. Meredith. Old lady was very cheerful. Thought and I was glad to see her back. She said she is pretty well today. Said it seems true that she is more true than ever. Aunt is quite fat. I have the pleasure and still seems to be improved. Miss. Miss. Give a good account of you. Aunt said your cousins before the left. She says she offered to bring some of your sketches. They didn't venture them to her. She says you are going to come. Uncle. Uncle. This is true. She repeated well of your prosperity. Thought you had done the right thing in going to Paris. They have gone back to their old lodge opposite but I didn't. She and Perren have had some trouble over the rent. She old fellow has really not quite understood you would have agreed to have been king on the first money, on a ladder. Piled up the tiles and on the back of the window so then Cordy never.
Mrs. Campbell has been very ill all the week with a fever, headache, something like what she had 12 or 18 years ago. She then thought it was influenza. She was really dangerous ill, for after their way they set off to return home two days before leaving for a doctor. Her sister down one night, to sit with her. Her disease has come down since then, so that she is able to be up for a little.

What news when Willlie is married? I have heard nothing about her two sisters. Mrs. I believe.

About Ann continues sick, the same. She is quite confined to her bed, only getting up to sit in a chair. She is in fact in a nervous state that she cannot see anyone except just her own immediate family. She won't see any of us. She died on Wednesday night, but it was not her very much.

I told you about Robert being made a superintendent of the Bank. I understand that they forced them into it. I trust better that the creditors have been paid. The Bank made them do it, and I trust they have been paid. The Bank would pay them 100,000.

A. Painting is being told off to his creditors. I saw very sorry for him.

Honest Jean came into light to say good bye. They are going to Craik with him. It is a good news for him.

All in the house are well, except that the master has had a slight headache. He looks very well for him.

We get notice from the correspondence office that we are about to be published in the papers. We have received the good news of it and write as a good home.
