LEAVING THE WAR ZONE—FIFTY (THREE) WAYS TO LEAVE YOUR LOVER
A feminist analysis of fifty–three women’s pathways to leaving a male partner who assaulted them by

Shirley Patton, BSW (Hons)
Discipline of Social Work,
School of Sociology and Social Work
A dissertation submitted in fulfilment of the requirements for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

University of Tasmania
October, 2005
Leaving the war zone

‘Well (it’s) like, all my life, I’ve been living in a concentration camp because my father is still living in the war zone, right. It was just a continuation on from that…When you step out of it, you know, it’s just like a big explosion of colour or something. I can’t explain it any other way…It was like finding a rainbow, like a peaceful thing or something…It was just like Dorothy and The Wizard of Oz, you know, like as if you put a pair of red shoes on. I even bought a pair of red shoes! It’s like you’ve got something to be happy about’ (‘Yasmin’, interviewee 2001).

Why feminism?

‘When the six o’clock news is a litany of men being oppressed, murdered and raped by women; when a female Taliban confines Afghan men to their homes; when African women emasculate boy children and call it “tradition”; when two men a week are routinely killed by their female partners; when boys are monthly molested, strangled and left to die in a ditch by female assailants; when the female equivalent of Eminem becomes the world's fastest selling popular singer with her songs about killing and mutilating men—come to me then…and complain about man-haters. Until that day, concern yourself with the reality: that every day, in every way, in every country and in every culture, men are hating women to death. And getting away with it’ (Burchill 2001).
DECLARATION

I certify that this thesis does not incorporate without acknowledgement any material previously submitted for a degree or diploma in any university; and that to the best of my knowledge and belief it does not contain any material previously published or written by another person where due reference is not made in the text.

CANDIDATE: ..........................................................................................................................

This thesis may be made available for loan and limited copying in accordance with the Copyright Act 1968.

CANDIDATE: ..........................................................................................................................
ABSTRACT

This study explored how women were able to leave a male partner who assaulted them, and the common critical success factors of leaving and establishing a new life for themselves and any children in their care. Conducted from a feminist standpoint, a qualitative exploration of 53 women’s perceptions of being able to leave was undertaken, using a non-probability purposive sampling method and semi-structured, in-depth interviews. Applying a thematic analysis, the results indicated that women used a variety of strategies to ‘manage’ and resist the abuse and violence, encountering numerous barriers to stopping the violence and/or to leaving, before reaching a final turning point. The pathways out of the violence included formal and informal support, supportive beliefs and information and underpinning structural supports, including relevant policies and laws. The study’s findings highlight the importance of developing strategies that focus on men taking responsibility for their use of violence, effective government and community responses, and changing societal attitudes.

The study provided examples of individual good practice in the responses of a range of workers, and identified a number of characteristics of good practice. Based on these characteristics, the study identified a generic framework for practice suggesting good practice at each of five identified phases of leaving. The study highlighted the importance of specialist domestic violence services and, in particular, mobile domestic violence crisis services, as an effective domestic violence service model. Integral to their effectiveness were: (a) their formal liaison with the police, through police Standing Orders; and (b) regional locations. Four key issues emerged requiring urgent attention: (1) women having to leave their homes; (2) the impoverishment of women who leave a violent partner; (3) the need for a consistent and integrated response across the service system; and (4) the importance of understanding both the role of hope and the concept of relational autonomy when responding to women who are assaulted by a male partner. The study discusses these findings in relation to contemporary social work practice.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost, I want to acknowledge the fifty-three women who bravely told me their story of leaving and starting a new life. Courage is the word that comes to mind when I think of the thread that winds through every story.

I wish to express my appreciation for the formal supervision I received from Professor Robert Bland and Dr Daphne Habibis and the informal supervision and/or support I received from colleagues Sandi MacIntosh, Mara Schneiders, Dr Karen Willis, Maurice Todd, Sonya Stanford, Cec Craft, Dr Glenda Jones, Deb Smith and Liz Little. Each of you, in your own unique way, has made a significant contribution to my journey. Thank you, each and every one of you.

My thanks also to Colleen Wegman both for her assistance with the presentation of the thesis and her good humour and Jane Emery for her editing assistance.

Undertaking a PhD is not only a professional journey that your colleagues share with you but also a personal one that your friends and loved ones travel too. I want to thank all my family and friends who have travelled with me on this journey and remained interested, supportive and encouraging over many years, particularly my partner, Tony and my children Sian, Simone and Adrian.
TABLE OF CONTENTS

List of Tables and Figures xi

Chapter 1: Introduction
1.1 Background 1
1.2 Research aims 5
1.3 Research questions 5
1.4 Significance of the problem 6
1.5 Summary of the study’s methodology 10
1.6 Summary of the study’s findings 11
1.6.1 Women in the study: Demographics 13
1.6.2 The violence women experienced 13
1.6.3 Turning points 14
1.6.4 The process of leaving: Pathways and barriers 15
1.6.5 The phases of leaving 15
1.6.6 Pathways and significant factors 16
1.6.7 Analysis of the significant factors of an effective response to women’s help-seeking 17
1.6.8 Barriers and significant factors 18
1.6.9 Analysis of the significant factors of an ineffective response to women’s help-seeking 18
1.6.10 Recognising diversity: Culture, background, circumstances and needs 19
1.7 Limitations of the study 22
1.8 Organisation of the thesis 23
1.9 Summary 24

Chapter 2: Literature Review
2.1 Introduction 25
2.2 Current definitions of domestic violence 26
3.5 Conceptual framework 85
  3.5.1 Feminist theory 88
  3.5.2 Social work theory 92
  3.5.3 Qualitative approaches 93
3.6 Ethical considerations 97
3.7 Research design 99
  3.7.1 Pilot study 100
  3.7.2 Interview schedule 100
  3.7.3 Obtaining the sample 101
  3.7.4 Data collection 103
  3.7.5 Data analysis 111
3.8 Summary 119

Chapter 4: The Women who Participated 120
  4.1 Introduction 120
  4.2 Demographics 120
  4.3 The violence and abuse that women experience 125
    4.3.1 Physical assault 125
    4.3.2 Sexual assault 127
    4.3.3 Abuse 128
  4.4 Violence and abuse to children 130
  4.5 Women’s responses to violence and abuse 132
  4.6 Men’s controlled use of violence 134
    4.6.1 Perpetrator programmes 134
  4.7 Summary 135

Chapter 5: The Process of Leaving and Establishing a New Life—Turning Points, Barriers and Pathways 137
  5.1 Introduction 137
  5.2 Turning points 137
    5.2.1 Summary 139
  5.3 Pathways and barriers 140
    5.3.1 Introduction 140
    5.3.2 Formal supports: Services—Pathways and barriers 141

8.1 Introduction 267
8.2 Agency and relational autonomy 267
8.2.1 Implications for social work 270
8.3 Hope: Losing hope, grieving and regaining hope for the future 272
8.3.1 The role of hope in the leaving process 274
8.3.2 Implications for social work 277
8.3.3 Summary 279
8.4 Summary 279

Chapter 9: Strategies for Social Change and Conclusion 281

9.1 Introduction 281
9.2 Violence: A choice 281
9.3 Social change strategies 282
9.4 Sherwin’s relational approach and social change 284
9.5 Homelessness and impoverishment 286
9.6 Achieving a consistent and integrated response 287
9.7 Conclusion 289